We are engaged Transitional Energy projects as a grassroots effort to include Indigenous participation in Net Zero Energy Transition. Our focus is to offer options for remote communities in regions with less developed infrastructures and the possibility for synergetic hybrid energy systems that combine nuclear and alternative energy sources, including renewables. Our core values include doing the right things in the right way; to honor our Ancestors. We care about our people, our community & our environment while adhering to our traditional values as well as to ensure that our projects are held to the highest levels of environmental and social responsibility. Environmental oversight; preferred status for Indigenous opportunities across our territory; and ownership of long-term sources of revenue generation is our focus to ensure a better future for generations to come. Our Indigenous-owned energy company shares a united message; that is, that equity and initiation of long-term partnerships, including subsequent investment in potential future projects, will contribute to the prosperity and change the socio-economic fabric of each Indigenous community, so that ultimately, any business deal will provide a prosperous future for this generation and the next seven generations. ## Mazini Energy & Power Inc. and Natural Law Energy Cooperation

TRANS MOUNTAIN PIPELINE

Natural Law Energy affirms its commitment to continue to lead at the negotiation table with Canada on the Trans Mountain Pipeline (TMX) and is honoured to support Nations in taking their rightful place in ownership and economic participation.

This is a watershed moment in our collective history; the sky river connecting to the earth river that is the lifeline of Mother Earth, and we know that it is time for our People to have a meaningful role in the management and economic benefits of the resources from our lands.

Natural Law will build on the successes of our proven track record of negotiating billion-dollar equity-share, revenue-share and operating models to work with Nations who want to move forward to take their rightful place in the TMX project.

We are supporting Nations in navigating the complex options and information and breaking through the jargon so that they can be self-determining in their participation. We will ensure that Nations who are uncertain of what they want but who need to have their path to participation preserved for them have a place at the table. Furthermore, Natural Law understands the importance of the TMX endeavor, and the global participation that will come with it to not only our People and Nations but the broader Canadian public as well.

Natural Law seeks to unite communities and nations behind our traditions, respect for culture and common purpose. We are stronger together.

Our Resources Are The Key To Our Sovereignty

Brian Mountain of Mazini Energy and Power Inc. and Hans Schmidt of PanAm Energy Development Corporation recently reached agreement in principle to work together to formulate a Joint Venture Concept to bring together a “Coalition” of First Nations to study Oil and Gas deposits, procure the necessary funding to develop and tie them in for production, near and on Indigenous Sovereign Reserve Lands.

In addition, PanAm’s Environmental, Social Governance concepts (ESG) are in alignment (see their Pledge attached as a short Pptx) with Mazini’s objectives and Indigenous Peoples’ deep-rooted beliefs in general. This would make for an orderly and realistic transition from a predominantly fossil-fueled world to a more environmentally friendly balanced energy space, feasible.

The Coalition, as envisaged, will allow First Nations the opening to make-up for lost opportunities after years of restrictive policies imposed on us and, as well, will permit industry partners regain sunk costs, ie., “the Risk Monies” invested to hunt for and delineate needed reserves as determined in years past when the fear of running out of oil [see Club of Rome – Limits to Growth] or geopolitical concerns from time to time were the main drivers of exploration for oil and gas.
